COO & OPERATIONS

COO & Operations Forum

For chief operating officers and senior operations, supply-chain, and manufacturing executives.

A confidential room for the leaders who carry delivery. Members examine capacity, complexity, and the organizational design underneath the operating result.

The issues members actually put on the table.

What comes into the room

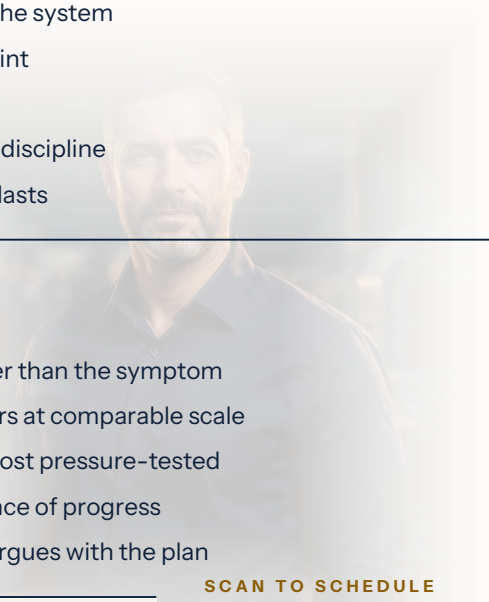

- Complexity that grew faster than the system
- Capacity, throughput, and constraint
- Supply-chain risk and resilience
- Operating cadence and execution discipline
- Building an operations bench that lasts

Every session ends in commitments, not conversation.

What members leave with

- A clear view of the constraint rather than the symptom
- Practical experience from operators at comparable scale
- Assumptions about capacity and cost pressure-tested
- Defined commitments with evidence of progress
- Peers to call when the plant floor argues with the plan

ROOM

Eight- to ten-member

STATUS

Now forming — Founding-member conversations underway

HOW THE ROOM WORKS

Rhythm, method, and the standard of participation.

Nothing enters the room to be discussed. Every issue is processed — examined, reframed, committed to, and returned against.

The standing calendar of the room.

Session rhythm

- Monthly virtual working session — up to three hours, facilitated
- Periodic site visits hosted by members
- Accountability check on prior commitments to open every session
- Annual leadership design session — team composition, decision rights and the altitude each seat now requires

EXHIBIT 2

The same four movements, every session.

How every issue is processed

01	Analyze	Clarify the issue, the consequence, the assumptions, and the decision it requires.
02	Refine	Use peer questions and relevant experience to reframe the issue and test available paths.
03	Commit	Define the action, the owner, the timing, and the evidence of progress.
04	Return accountable	Report what happened, what was learned, and what happens next.

THE MECHANISM

Not a mastermind. A recurring leadership operating mechanism.

A Compass Executive Forum is not a mastermind or a networking group. It is a recurring leadership operating mechanism: the standing session where executives examine what has changed in the business, where roles, decision rights and alignment are drifting, what must be preserved, and what must be recalibrated — and leave with commitments on the record.

01	02	03	04	05	06
Business change	Executive reflection	Leadership recalibration	Operating decision	Execution	Renewal

The same five questions, asked in order.

What the room examines each session

- What changed — The conditions the current design was built for — demand, capacity, ownership, economics — and what has moved since the last session.
- Where it is drifting — Roles, decision rights and alignment: where the enterprise is now operating differently than it was designed to.
- What must be preserved — The parts of the operating system producing the result. Renewal is not reinvention.
- What must be recalibrated — The decision, the owner, the timing and the evidence — carried out of the room as a commitment, then returned to accountable.
- Who must carry it now — The seat the work now belongs to. As the enterprise changes, the leadership required to run it changes with it — and the room says so plainly before the calendar does.

LEAD™ sets it. ARC™ renews it.

Where it sits in the architecture

LEAD™ sets decisions, ownership and cadence. ARC™ — Analyze, Refine, Commit — renews them on a rhythm. The forum is where both are run monthly on issues that carry real consequence, with noncompeting peers and full confidentiality.

MEMBERSHIP

Who belongs, and what every member commits to.

The standards are the room. They are stated before an invitation is offered and held for as long as a member sits at the table.

A

Fit is confirmed in both directions before an invitation.

Who belongs in this room

- Enterprise or multi-site operations accountability
- Noncompeting with every other member of the room
- Willing to open the real operating picture to peers
- Committed to attendance and confidentiality

B

Held for as long as a member sits at the table.

What every member commits to

- Bring the real issue
- Attend prepared and on time
- Remain fully present
- Protect confidentiality
- Challenge with respect
- Contribute experience without prescribing
- Make clear commitments
- Return accountable
